EXAMINER'S COMMENTS

1. Applicant's argument that the Board of Appeals decision in Ex parte Kroger appears to be relevant to the present circumstances is persuasive. In that decision, the Board determined that the declarations establishing that Kroger and Rod were inventors of the filed invention (even though Rod was not a co-author of the reference being applied against the claims) were persuasive. Because the four instant inventors have all signed a declaration establishing that they are the inventors of the instant invention and because the issues concerning the author Trimachi have been resolved, the Jung reference no longer qualifies as prior art against the instant invention.
